

Sadie Luetmer

Sadie Luetmer graduated summa cum laude from the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities in 2011 with an individually designed inter-departmental BA in International Human Rights. As part of her interdisciplinary program she studied “Social Change & Democracy” in Northern Ireland and interned at the Peace & Reconciliation Group in Derry~Londonderry.

Sadie has worked as a photographer and journalist, including a 2011 stint in Kosovo where she wrote on a three-person team investigating post-conflict issues; while there she published in multiple outlets with a focus on gender issues, corruption and the judiciary, and the roles and practices of the international missions. Sadie has also covered labor and environmental activism issues from the American Midwest. In the fall of 2014, Sadie was a TAMOP Young Researcher scholarship recipient at the Institute for Social and European Studies. Her research was titled “Journalism in the Digital Age.”